How Dealer Reviews Work on CarGurus

Many shoppers depend on reviews to help them make considered choices in the marketplace. For this reason, we make every effort to keep our users' dealer reviews fair and honest.

CarGurus users are invited to write reviews only after interacting with a dealership on the CarGurus platform. Dealers may respond to user reviews publicly – which we encourage – or file a dispute with us if they believe a review to be fraudulent.

Reviews: The Shopper Perspective

In the interest of keeping reviews honest and useful, we will not allow shoppers to:

- Make accusations of criminal conduct.
- Use words that can't be said on prime-time TV.
- Attack dealers personally.
- Use of the last names of dealership personnel.

Each dealer review CarGurus receives gets screened, and if we receive a review we can't publish for some reason, we invite the submitter to edit and re-submit it.

Reviews: The Dealer Perspective

CarGurus dealers will receive a notification at the email address listed in their dealer dashboard when a shopper submits a review of their dealership. That notification will include an invitation to respond to the review directly or challenge it as fraudulent. The tools to respond to reviews are available to any dealer with inventory on the site, regardless of whether it has a business relationship with CarGurus.

Things to Keep in Mind:

- We will NOT remove negative reviews simply because a dealer advertises with CarGurus.
- We recommend responding to a review before initiating a challenge, because challenged reviews will remain live until we get a chance to examine them.
- Dealers must submit evidence to support any claim that a review is fraudulent.
- A dealer's response will be published just below the review itself – make sure it is fit for public consumption and not aimed at the reviewer alone.

CarGurus strongly discourages dealers from providing any financial incentive to a consumer for leaving a review. Reviews are only useful to shoppers if they are honest and genuine.
